Akram Azimi is a young man with a passion for the transformative capacity of education. He arrived in Australia at the age of 11 with his family as refugees from Afghanistan and progressed through the education system to study science, law and anthropology at UWA. While there he travelled to the Kimberley working as a mentor to young indigenous people. He is currently studying post graduate science at UWA and is a speaker in demand.

Akram will share his personal story taking us on a journey of the 'story of education' to advance global citizenship.

All funds raised will be used to support the One World Centre's Global Citizenship work.
